

The Indiana telephone privacy law has completely eliminated unwanted solicitations at my household, just as I intended by registering with the Attorney General of Indiana. This has allowed me to get much needed rest during the day without interruption and to fully enjoy precious time spent with my family.

The Federal Government should enact legislation to protect telephone privacy, but they should not preempt state law. I am a veteran and a citizen of the United States, and I do not want the Federal Government to diminish the protections I enjoy thanks to the noble efforts of the Indiana Attorney General.

The Federal Government should be responsive to its citizens, not to companies. Any company, that needs to contact me, can do so via the U.S. Postal Service, which desperately needs the revenue generated solicitor mailings.
